At the heart of the city

A former industrial building with a well-established place among Strasbourg's architectural heritage sites, the Seegmuller Tower has been fully renovated to host these new living quarters. Located in the booming Presqu'île Malraux district, close to the central campus, the tram, the media library, the cinema, various cultural venues and shops, the International University House is very much an integral part of the city centre. The ideal location to really get the most from Strasbourg's increasingly vibrant cultural scene.

A cultural melting pot

Strasbourg (whose name originally meant “the city at the crossroads”) benefits from its rich binational history and the multiple cultures which have influenced it. As a European capital, it also has a symbolic status as the city of peace and dialogue among cultures. Firmly rooted in this modern and outward looking environment, the International University House is intended to be a crossroads for intercultural contact and dialogue. A stay at the International University House provides an opportunity to experience living with people from all around the world. Every effort is made to encourage dialogue and sharing:

An open area intended to host themed exhibitions, video projections and conferences

A diverse programme of cultural activities (visits to the European institutions and guided tours of the city, excursions)

Events are organised around the world’s traditional festivities

International associations to swap hints and tips and to get involved in student life

The Seegmuller Tower

Built in 1934 in a distinctive 1930s style, the Seegmuller Tower housed the former grain silos. Disused since the 1990s, this emblematic building so dear to the memory of Strasbourg’s inhabitants was fully renovated over a period of two years (2014-2015) to become the new home to university departments and apartments. To preserve the building’s historical identity, all of the tower’s original facades have been retained.

OPERATION CAMPUS: SIX PUBLIC PARTNERS WORKING TOWARDS A COMMON CAUSE

The International University House is the result of one of the 25 projects in Strasbourg collectively referred to as «Operation Campus». Launched by the State, this programme granted special financing to 12 French university sites to improve their infrastructure. The €17 million needed for the building's renovation was financed by the Société d'Aménagement et d'Équipement de la Région de Strasbourg (Strasbourg regional amenities trust) – (€10 million), the Bas-Rhin General Council (€2.5 million), the Strasbourg Eurometropolis (€1.5 million), the Alsace Region (€1.5 million) and the University of Strasbourg (€1.5 million).
